

Writing Your Life Announces Interview Availability for National History Month

Orlando, Florida. October 11, 2017 – Patricia Charpentier of Writing Your Life, an organization devoted to personal and family history writing is now available for interviews for National Family History Month.

Originated by Patricia Charpentier, Writing Your Life assists people in writing their life stories. Through ghostwriting memoirs, co-authoring, editing, and instructing, Writing Your Life co-creates printed legacies for generations to come.

National Family History Month is observed each year in October and has grown on a national basis since it began in 2001. Memorial service professionals, genealogical societies, historians, narrators, and family and historical societies promote and celebrate National Family History Month to commemorate each family's rich and deep history. The observance focuses on the importance of sharing and capturing family stories, which inspires families and communities to connect in real and meaningful ways.

Writing Your Life is a business dedicated to personal and family history writing, offers ongoing workshops and courses, including curricula that use videos, group, and one-on-one coaching. Through writing chronicles on behalf of others, editing and instruction, Writing Your Life has assisted hundreds of individuals in creating a written legacy for their family and generations to come. When asked why National History Month is close to her heart, Ms. Charpentier said: "It's important for families to document their family history and preserve their stories for themselves and their families." She further stated, "It's an enjoyable process for the writer to have the ability to see their book and words in writing, and it begins conversations that likely would never have occurred otherwise."
